Dear Sir or Madam:

Please allow my husband, Dirk Coldewey, to revive his patent applications. He did not see his letters from the patent office, and was not aware that there were missing parts to his application due to some upheavals in our home life. Around the time of the birth of our second child, we did some rearranging. We switched the study and the nursery, and in the process, some important papers got boxed up. The missing letters from the patent office were in one of those boxes.

Thanks for your consideration in this serious matter.

Sincerely,

Blythe A. Campbell

Gentle Patent Examiner,

I respectfully petition for the revival of patent application number 09/755,754 on grounds of Unintentional Delay. Attached is the required reply to the notice, as indicated in the Notice of Abandonment sent to me on 6/16/03.

I believe the unfortunate delay in the request for an abstract was likely the result of a filing error; it happened to coincide with the pending birth of my second son, a time of considerable chaos and upheaval in the Coldewey household. I am an independent inventor, with this being my first patent application (actually submitted concurrently with a related application). I mention this not as an excuse, but as an explanation – certainly responding to a request for an abstract is a simple, almost trivial task that could easily have been performed.

I beg your forbearance in this matter, and hope for a favorable response to my petition. If granted, I pledge to consult a patent attorney going forward in an effort to avoid further delays.

Humbly,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read "Dirk Coldewey", with a stylized flourish at the end.
